

FORTY FIVE TEN'S DIVINELY DECADENT, OVER-THE-TOP NIGHT

BY CHRISTINA GEYER. PHOTOGRAPHY STEVE FOXALL.

Santa wore a custom suit (by Bea Harper), a mannequin donned a vintage peasant blouse and velvet skirt (Yves Saint Laurent), and a kaleidoscope of jewels and handbags were present (too many to mention). Rounding out the opulence? The Dallas debut of artist Waylande Gregory's ceramics and honorary chairman Jan Showers signing her new book, Glamorous Rooms. This was the mise-en-scene at Forty Five Ten's December Decadence, as concocted by owners Brian Bolke and Shelly Musselman, co-host Kim Whitman and PaperCity, all to benefit The Family Place. Socials shed their minks, grabbed a bubbly "forest fizz" (Moët & Chandon, black raspberry Belvedere vodka, crème de cassis) and posed for pictures atop the lap of a St. Nick in stunner shades. Perhaps the most sought-after outfit was Santa's red suit — "I'm so ho-ho-ho-happy!" chuckled the white-bearded Steve Wrubel.

Closet Dreams

Clotheshorses swooned in the presence of honorary chairman Cameron Silver, the dapper owner of Decades, the Los Angeles and London boutique known for its endless cabinets of designer vintage. "I'm going to look around the vintage for a minute," said fellow honorary chairman Jan Showers, perusing the racks and shelves Silver had stocked with timeless treasures from his archives. And with every decade represented — from a '60s
